Campers Given Warning Against Mountain Rodents

ROY O. GILBERT, M. D.
Los Angeles County Health Officer

With vacation season at hand, those who plan to camp out may think the chattering chipmunk or the frisky squirrel is a friendly nuisance around camp. Food must be guarded from contamination by these raiders. Cereal boxes, bread, sweets—in fact, all food stuffs are a great magnet for these animals.

However, a thieving squirrel ruins a pound of butter or a pack rat runs off with a slice of bread, but in exchange can leave typhus fever or bubonic plague in their wake. These two diseases are caused by the bite of an infected flea harbored on rodents. Rodents include not only the large Norway rats and the house mouse that sets up house-keeping in the attic, but also ground and tree squirrels, chipmunks, and pack rats.

Brushed off a chipmunk in the scramble for food, a flea will take up temporary residence on a human being until such time as he may hop a rodent. Fleas desert dead rodents and if children or adults trap and kill them the humans may become passing hosts with the chance of being bitten by the disease-bearing flea.

Trapping and poisoning of squirrels and other rodents in the National forests are prohibited by others than the rangers or specialized workers in this field of sanitation. Well-screened cupboards and storage should be included in campers' equipment. All raw food ought to be thoroughly scrubbed prior to eating and no cooked food should be left uncovered longer than absolutely necessary.

'47 State Fair Opens August 28 In Sacramento

Heralding the coming California centennials, a colorful procession depicting the history of the state will open in the 1947 California State Fair in Sacramento the night of August 28. The fair will run through September 7.

Adrian Awan, noted Hollywood producer of outdoor plays and pageants, will stage the procession, in which the participants largely will be riding groups, organizations, and societies from over the state.
